

FRANCE ASKS CURB ON NAVY AS PRICE FOR GERMAN LOAN

Demands That Policy of Navy Be Suspended At Once

OTHER REQUESTS, TOO

Does Not Want Any Reduction in French Armaments

By Frederic K. Abbott

PARIS, July 11.—Unless Germany grants political concessions, that country will receive no aid from France in raising a $360,000,000 loan to stave off bankruptcy and possible revolution.

That was the situation in Paris today, as Dr. Hans Luther, president of the German Reichsbank, who came here to enlist French support for the loan, prepared to return to Berlin. Dr. Luther spent yesterday conferring with French Government officials and financiers. After hearing their views, he decided to postpone his trip to Basle and return by plane to Berlin in order to place the French position before the German Cabinet.

France's terms for participating in the huge international loan sought by Germany were understood to be as follows:

1. Announcement of the Anschluss, or Austro-German customs union.
2. Suspension of the German naval programme.
3. Assurance that Germany will not support any move destined to bring about a reduction in French armaments considered necessary to French security.

Rather than grant such terms, it was reported in Paris today that Chancellor Bruening would prefer to resign, a step that would certainly bring the German crisis to a head, entailing far-reaching consequences from which even France could not escape.

Hitherto, the French press has inclined to the view that Germany has been bluffing, but that attitude has now changed. Government officials and newspaper editors are plainly worried over developments, but at the same time they wish to lose no opportunity to bolster France's position on the continent at the expense of Germany.

Hint Murder in Fire Death

Charred almost beyond recognition, the body of Mrs. Marion Day Berrien, former Pollys beauty, was discovered in the fire-swept ruins of her home in one of the most exclusive sections of Forest Hills, L. I., smart New York residential suburb. With the finding of the body, authorities were presented with a mystery that may equal the Snyder-Gray case. Although the beauty, 30 years old and widow of a naval officer, might have met her death accidentally, murder was hinted in the preliminary investigation. The partly destroyed home of Mrs. Berrien is shown with the ex-stage star in insert.

INTERNAL SITUATION ALARMING IN GERMANY

Recent Flight of Mark Causes Considerable Worry at Washington

HOPE FOR IMPROVEMENT

By Pierce Miller
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, July 11.—One phase of the Hoover debt holiday which still disturbed the Administration today was the internal situation in Germany.

When President Hoover announced his project for a year's suspension of debts on June 20, his object was to save Germany from financial chaos.

The recent flight of the mark despite the successful culmination of the Franco-American negotiations to make the holiday effective in time to achieve the full psychological effect, is causing considerable concern. Confidence is expressed that all will be well. Nevertheless, withdrawals from Germany since July 4th have been approximately $55,000,000, or somewhere near $10,000,000 a day.

On Thursday $12,000,000 in short term credits were withdrawn, and $5,000,000 the day before.

On the success of the journey of Dr. Hans Luther, president of the German Reichsbank, to Paris, in search of credit appeared to depend Germany's ability to weather the storm.

Psychological effect of the holiday proposal was largely depended upon by the President to restore confidence in Germany and thus improve the world economic situation. While this effect was partially realized, it lost much of its effect as time went by and the world realized there would have to be negotiations to get the French to accept the idea.

MOTOR TOURS LEAD OVER NEW BRIDGE HERE

Many Delightful Beaches Are Spread Along Southern
New Jersey

TRIPS ARE OUTLINED

In no other vacation center in the East are so many delightful beaches and strands to be found than in the southern section of New Jersey. The Keystone Automobile Club has outlined an attractive motor vacation trip through this section which includes Atlantic City, Ocean City, Sea Isle City, Wildwood and Cape May.

"The entire round trip can be covered in approximately 200 miles," says Russell B. Carty, representative of the motor club. "Bathing, boating, fishing, golf and all manner of outdoor sports can be found at any of these attractive shore resorts."

From Bristol the tour leads over the bridge to Burlington thence to Mount Holly. From here take the Pemberton road for a distance of about four miles when Route 39 is met. A right turn onto Route 39 leads to near Hammonton, where U. S. Route 30 is met. Here a left turn is made into U. S. Route 30 which leads through Egg Harbor and Absecon direct to Atlantic City.

Atlantic City, long an all year round resort is justly entitled to the title of "The World's Playground." With its famous boardwalk stretching for eight miles along a golden strand, the city attracts visitors from all parts of the globe. A wonderful bathing beach, boating and yachting facilities and the closeness of numerous country clubs where golf, tennis and other outdoor sports can be indulged in makes Atlantic City a mecca for throngs of tourists annually. Southward from this resort excellent state highways can be followed through Somers Point and across Egg Harbor Bay to Ocean City another charming coast resort.

From this point the travelers can use the highway paralleling the ocean side to Sea Isle City or strike inland from Ocean City and drive south over State Route 4 through Cape May Court House. Here a side trip leads to Stone Harbor, while Wildwood, Anglesea and Wildwood Crest can be reached either from Burlington or Rio Grande over excellent highways. Continuing southward over Route 4 however the tourists reach historic Cape May. Here the elite of Philadelphia, New York and Pittsburgh, maintain summer homes and one of the most attractive events of the summer season is the annual hydra-gea show, a colorful festival held late in July. On the homeward journey state route 49 can be followed along the Delaware Bay region to Penns Grove where the Delaware is crossed or U. S. Route 30 can be used across the state and through Camden to Philadelphia.

TWO AUTO CRASHES BLAMED ON RAIN

Truck Driver Smashes Vehicle to Escape Hitting Car
Full of Children

ONE MAN BADLY HURT

LANGHORNE, July 11.—Two automobile accidents attributed to rain occurred on the Lincoln Highway yesterday.

Joseph Volk, of 217 Bird street, Pennington, was driving to Philadelphia on the Lincoln Highway with seven children who were anticipating a visit to the Philadelphia Zoo. Near here a truck proceeding in the same direction stopped without warning. Afraid to apply his brakes because of the wet roadway, Volk turned his machine sharply to the left only to see a heavy truck approaching in the opposite direction.

When Michael Flatley, Jr., 22 years old, of 5549 Jefferson street, Philadelphia, the driver of the truck, saw the children in the Volk car, he swerved his machine from the highway. The vehicle felled a small tree in its dizzy course and then crashed into a big tree on the edge of the road.

Thomas Gillen, 25, of Fourth and Nobel streets, Philadelphia, a helper on the truck, suffered a severed artery of the right leg and multiple cuts and bruises about the face. He was treated by Dr. Henry Lovett.

The body of the truck was almost torn off as it hit the tree. The vehicle with its wheels broken blocked part of the highway and caused traffic to move at a snail's pace. Highway Patrolman Hohelfelder, of the Langhorne Station, investigated and directed traffic at the scene of the mishap.

The second accident also occurred near here during a heavy downpour. John R. Huggins, of Upper Darby, proceeding east on the Lincoln Highway, lost his sense of direction, swerved across the road and ripped eight guard posts from the ground after grazing a car driven by Max Gentsch, of 561 West Fisher avenue, Philadelphia. The vehicle then landed right side up in a ditch. No one was injured.

CROYDON, July 11.—William M. Labor, 14, son of Mr. and Mrs. James A. Labor, Rosa avenue, died yesterday in the Harriman Hospital to which institution he was taken last Sunday after colliding with an automobile at State Road and Patterson avenue.

The accident occurred Sunday afternoon at about 2:15 when Labor riding his bicycle along the roadway is said to have steered from in back of an automobile directly into the path of a machine operated by Edward Ivins, 70, 5213 Jackson street, Philadelphia.

The youth was a graduate of the Bristol High school having received his diploma in June. He was patrol leader of Blazing Hour Patrol, Boy Scouts; member of the Wilkinson Memorial M. E. Church, and pianist there, and member of P. N. T.

In the machine with Ivins at the time of the accident was Miss Frances Galore, 23, 2957 Headley street, Philadelphia.

At the time of the accident Ivins told Constable Crawford that he was driving the car. He was released under bail to await the outcome of the injuries to the Labor boy.

Following the death of Labor, police summoned both Ivins and Miss Galore. They arrived at the Bristol Municipal building and then Ivins and Miss Galore informed the police that Miss Galore was driving the car at the time of the accident. She exhibited a learner's permit.

ACHIEVING HAPPINESS

It is a fallacy to say that an unhappy tendency is in knowledge and, conversely, a happy tendency in ignorance or lack of thought. Happiness is due to quite other causes. It is, to begin with, a question of temperament. One whose disposition is to be happy will not be less so because of culture and reflection: this will simply result in a wider sphere of happy living, and in a more complex and subtle kind of happiness. It will bring, too, the kind of happiness that endures; for it is plain that happiness based upon intellectual and artistic interests, happiness derived from the thoughtful contemplation of life, will last beyond a purely animal satisfaction in living.

When the body is satiated, or tired, or bored—when food and sex and the youthful adventures of action have lost the keen edge of their appeal—then the mind can still function with unimpaired vitality and joy. The way to assure oneself a happy old age is to cultivate a number of interests, and not restrict one's life to a few simple physical motions. After temperament, one's situation in life determines one's happiness. He who enjoys prosperity, good health, and interesting work will be happier than he who is denied this material basis for happiness. The ignorant man to whom life is a struggle is certainly not happier than the intelligent man to whom life is a pleasant, successful adventure. Again, happiness is subject to moods; none of us feels happy or unhappy, day after day, without change; the unhappy man has his moments of cheerfulness, of curiosity, of keen desire—and the happiest man will fall into a mood of sadness. We have read so often that "Ignorance is bliss," and heard so often that the fool has nothing to worry him, that we have come to regard it as an axiom. A little observation will prove this to be untrue. Ignorant people often have a sad or tragic habit of mind. Brooding on life is not the peculiar habit of the thinker.

As a rule, too, ignorant people are poor (which is not to say that all the poor are ignorant, nor that the very intelligent only are successful) and this condition of poverty does not infallibly make for that happiness which is supposed to distinguish and bless those of inferior mentality. On the other hand, thought can be happy—art can be thrilling—wisdom can unfold serene and joyous aspects of life that are missed by the ignorant.

An easy way to make a friend is to tell someone he works too hard.

Married men are said to work harder; single ones say they have to.

Those looking forward instead of backward see what's coming first.

Fable: Once upon a time two cars collided on the highway and the drivers conferred thereafter in whispers.

If you keep still long enough, people will wonder what you think. Mr. Coolidge gets $150,000 a year for satisfying public curiosity.

"MAKE-BELIEVE" by FAITH BALDWIN

Copyright, 1930, by Faith Baldwin

Distributed by King Features Syndicate, Inc.

Travers Lortimer, son of the wealthy Margaret Lortimer, broods constantly for Delight Harford, whom he claims to have married in England during the war. No trace can be found of the girl, and when Travers mistakes Mary Lou Thurston, pretty, young orphan, for Delight, Mrs. Lortimer induces Mary Lou to play part. Travers is told he must win "Delight" all over again. In the months that follow, Travers is more attracted to "Delight" than ever. Mary Lou loves Travers and feels she cannot keep up the masquerade. Just as the crisis is reached, Larry Mitchell, Mary Lou's newspaper reporter friend, locates the real Delight acting in a revue. Mary Lou is stunned by the news.

CHAPTER XXXVII

SHE mopped childishly at her eyes with a wisp of handkerchief and controlled herself with an effort. She came and stood before him, straight and small in her soft, fine tweed frock . . . her lovely hair gleaming about her small white face.

"Did you tell her?" she demanded.

"No. I wanted to tell you first. Mrs. Lortimer should know, too, before Travers is told. I think it's all up to you, Mary Lou. And look here," begged Larry, unable any more to endure the sight of her silent misery, "if you say the word, no one need ever know except us. I'll not tell. I don't think she'll ever—ever try to find anyone belonging to Lortimer. I think it's safe. Say the word, then. Mary Lou, and we'll forget that I found her."

A Tangled Web

He could and would. Said so. And after a little, took his leave, unable to give her more comfort than could be conveyed in the hand and hugging grip of his big, loyal hand. He walked over to the Wynne place and spent the earlier part of the evening explaining to his worried Jenny that his obvious abstraction was due to a recent editorial rejection.

Mary Lou had half an hour alone in the library before the Lortimers returned. Peter came in to light the lamps and she asked him, sitting curled up on the window seat, not to do so for a while. A little troubled and bewildered, happiness, she looked out at the darkening spring sky, and the single stars pricking through the air was soft, with a suggestion of summer in it and yet the lingering chill of winter. Flowers were in the borders; she could smell hyacinths. All her life she would hate hyacinths.

Over. The Fool's Paradise. Well, it was something, she thought drowsily, to have known it at all. To have known—him. It couldn't have lasted anyway; it was built on make-believe, on pretense, on a romantic sort of fairy tale.

Pretty soon she would go away with the pretty new clothes and the new trunk and luggage she'd been given. Pretty soon she'd go away with a little bank she'd go with. A success in her job. Mrs. Lortimer would give her a reference. She laughed aloud in the silent room. A reference. She would have enough money to live quietly for a time, go to business school perhaps. Gram would take her in or Larry would find a place for her in town. Mrs. Lortimer would miss her. . . . She would miss. . . . She began to cry again.

The End

She'd see Mrs. Lortimer again perhaps after it was all over. She couldn't bear not seeing her. And Larry and Jenny. . . .

But she wouldn't see him again. She couldn't. And yet she couldn't endure not seeing him. Never to hear him laugh, never to hear his voice. Never to meet—and look away—from his ardent and compelling eyes. No! No! . . . Over.

Sitting there, a huddle of unhappiness, she looked out at the darkening spring sky.

If she had been jealous of the wealth of that other girl, of the thought of her, the thought which was after all only part of the fairy tale . . . how much more bitterly and keenly she suffered thinking of her, alive, near by, a flesh and blood human being, with a voice that spoke and eyes that saw, a heart that beat and claims . . . claims which could not be ignored.

When she heard the car come up the drive she jumped up and ran out of the library and up to her room. She must bathe her eyes and get herself together again before anyone saw her. They'd know, if they saw her.

That night she was terribly gay. She teased Lortimer, she was never still a moment, jumping up from the table to turn the radio on—off—on again. She ate nothing. Lortimer regarded her with affectionate amusement as if she were some small beloved child given to spurts of restless mischief. But Margaret Lortimer looked at her with misgiving. What had happened? What had Larry Mitchell said to her?

Larry and Jenny came over later in the evening for just a few minutes. Larry had a word with Mary Lou.

"Have you told her?" he asked.

"No, not yet. I shall tonight."

She smiled at him. Her eyes were hard and bright as jewels.

"Are you all right?"

"Well? Of course! Why not?"

"Don't be silly, Larry. . . ."

And she was gone from him, a slender streak of flame in a coral gown.

But Lortimer, although he tried, never succeeded in getting her alone for a minute that evening.

At 11 o'clock they had all gone upstairs. Margaret was undressed and reading in bed when there came a knock on the door which connected her rooms with those of Mary Lou.

"It's me," said Mary Lou with a fine disregard of grammar.

"May I come in?"

"Dear, of course!"

She came in, wearing her pale water-lily green pajamas and the little black and gold lame jacket, her feet in golden mules, her hair in curly condition. She sat down on a low chair by Margaret's wide bed and leaned her fragrant cheek against the older woman's slim hand.

"Does the arm ache tonight?"

she asked.

"No—." Margaret smiled. It did ache a little. But that didn't matter. What mattered was—

Mary Lou. . . . She wanted to ask her. . . . "Does . . . the heart ache tonight?" She thought that it did.

The girl's eyes had such a look of deep, veiled pain in them. "What's wrong, dear?" asked Mrs. Lortimer.

"Nothing. Everything's right."

Larry came to tell me. . . . Oh, please—." begged Mary Lou, "please don't get upset. . . . I did me. . . . he has found. . . . Delight Harford."

Mrs. Lortimer stiffened suddenly and then relaxed. A sigh escaped her. She then said a curious thing, a brutal thing, one might believe.

"So she is alive. I hoped she was dead," said Mrs. Lortimer.

"Yes, she's alive," Mary Lou murmured.

"Where is she? Is he sure?"

"In New York. Yes, he's sure."

She told him, Mary Lou said, and forced herself to repeat the story, word for word, as she had heard it.

After a minute Mrs. Lortimer said, briskly:

"I see. After looking for her all these years. . . . well. . . . I'll—" the story must be investigated. I don't believe we should say anything to Travers. Not yet. Go to bed now and try to sleep."
